WORLD WAR II ERA-Personal Wartime Diaries

A search for any World War II diary prohibition uncovered no War Dept regulation, order or circular specifically on the subject. However, the War Dept's Basic Field Manual, Military Intelligence, Counter-intelligence: FM 30-25 (15 Feb 1940), which remained in force throughout the war, did cover personal diaries. According to its Paragraph 48, such diaries were to be impounded at the unit level and stored with central rear area records. However, an article in the Jun 1943 issue of Field Artillery Journal, p. 438, states that a unit censor could allow soldiers to keep their diaries in they contained no military information.
